1. On 21 February 1948 the Chinese Communists captured Anshan (122-57, 41-08). About 500 engineers and technicians who were then in Anshan were allowed to leave; many pled that they had families in Mukden. The representatives of the group stated that their departure was facilitated by the Communists.
2. After their arrival in Nationalist-held territory they were detained and questioned. From Mukden they were airlifted to Peking.
3. One of the representatives was approached in Anshan by a bewildered Communist soldier who asked to be directed to the "Russian technicians' headquarters".
Note: This could indicate that there are Soviet technicians in Anshan; however, no evidence of their duties was reported.
